"O. U. WEST"

The irate father of Oliver U. West, as is customary with irate fathers, sends his son west to his partner's ranch to sober up and repent his sins; but since the locale of the story starts on the Pacific Coast, Mr. West Sr. sends his son east --- to the west. When "O. U. " wakes up in a compartment of a Pullman he discovers a note pinned to his suitcase informing him that he is out from under the parental roof for at least a year, and that if he can make good in that time he will be received F. O. B. as an absolutely new model.

In his endeavor to re-orient himself and get his bearings, Oliver beseeches the porter to get "something for his head"; and that colored worthy returns at the next station with a couple of bottles of Clover's Mange Cure. The two get drunk together on the contents of these bottles, which is really potable, and eventually detrain together with the Pullman hammock, chasing a jack-rabbit across the desert to settle an argument as to whether it is a mountain lion or a Missouri mule. They debark at a water tower a few hundred yards from the station to which West Senior has consigned his wayward son, in care of Cass Jones, his partner in the ranch. Cass and his daughter, Tina, eventually overtake Oliver and the coon at a little cabin where a man has just been shot. In his inebriated condition Oliver thinks he has committed the deed; and when Jones finds out from the wounded rancher that the Crawley boys have done it he does not undeceive Oliver, figuring that this will be a good way to keep him at work for a year and win the $5,000 wager his partner has made him. So he tells the boy that he will say nothing about it provided he will promise to stay for a year and work for him.

During the course of the year the Crawley brothers, desperate cattle rustlers, make away with a whole herd at the Round-Up. Oliver, almost single-handed, gets the best of the Crawleys, recovers the herd, and makes the band prisoners. He falls in love with Tina during his stay, and eventually gets the parental blessing and a real cowboy hat as "something for his head".
